Title: Financial Analyst - Job 1294ws

Location: Highly rated mid western city

This position is a great opportunity for someone to use his/her financial analysis skills. The position is in a group that has a broad-ranging charter to value assets and to structure transactions in the power and gas businesses. In addition, the group is responsible for developing full cash-flow projections together with income statements and balance sheets for major investment projects in energy infrastructure.

The incumbent would work on any of the projects in a lead or team-member role, and advance in project responsibility as fast as he/she learns.

The client is one of the largest energy production and delivery groups in the world, operating in both regulated and unregulated markets in Europe and the US Midwest. The company has a global perspective and there are many possible career tracks across a growing, diversified business portfolio..

Background Desired

The ideal candidate would have a BS/BA degree plus an MBA or CFA, and some prior experience in the energy field. The candidate should have an excellent academic record and be able to demonstrate a clear aptitude for challenging analytical tasks. The level of experience can vary from 2-8 years, and the responsibilities would be adjusted accordingly.

The successful candidate will be completely comfortable in a data-intensive environment and be able to identify data needs, build appropriate financial models, and provide succinct explanations of results.

It is important for the candidate to have a strong commercial orientation, and be able to understand the business issues and make the connection between the analysis and the potential commercial benefits.
